Challenges HR and Managers Face

- 1 HR departments need to be empowered to perform a more strategic role within the organization's revenue growth plans.
- 2 Traditional performance management models are weak as they are too inflexible and focused on past performance and not enough impacting future performance.
- 3 Managers are battling to affectively manage the performance of their remote and culturally diverse workforce.
- 4 48% of executives say that their performance process is 'weak' at improving development and driving business value. 66% of employees say that performance review process interferes with their productivity.

Do things differently. Why change now?

It's time to empower your HR department to contribute to the organization's revenue growth!

An effective performance management program leads to 10% increase in employee engagement, as much as 36% lower voluntary turnover and up to 25% increase in revenue per employee.

Workforce goals need to be flexible to align with these challenging times as well as with the organization's cultural diversity. Goals and their progress need to be easily tracked, and making them visible to others leads to a better team alignment. Assessment results should lead to an holistic performance insight into your workforce, helping you identify, recognize and develop the true performers across the organization.
